INVESTOR + MENTOR
OPPORTUNITIES

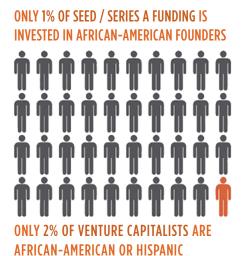

Silicon Valley, the American Dream 2.0, has been a mecca of innovation for over 60 years, creating and incubating some of the most well known companies in the world. For each break out start-up company that has become a global success, there has been a founding team of persistent engineering and business minds. Regardless of schooling, two experiences most successful tech founders share are exposure to Silicon Valley and access to family (or friend) resources. This both increases the opportunity for funding and makes for a higher risk tolerance when pursuing entrepreneurial ventures. Not surprisingly, these experiences lend themselves to a particular demographic. From early-stage startups to accomplished corporations, Silicon Valley is primarily run by white males.

The hiring process and culture of the tech work environment has been formed by the majority. The start-up fund raising process from angel to series A has been formed by the majority. Every component of the Silicon Valley dream to build the future is fraught with challenges, but when you come from a different background than those who have been working in the space for years, the challenges are amplified.

Transparent Collective (TC) is a group of founders dedicated to increasing exposure and access to Silicon Valley for African-American as well as Latino/Hispanic men and women. TC is working to break down barriers that acutely affect the success of minority founders at the early start-up stage. The first barrier we are addressing is access to seed funding and this is how you can help.

VISION SUPPORTER

Commit to attending our events and sharing it with your colleagues. We want TC founders to have a variety of bright minds in the room when they pitch.

Over the past few years, the challenge of obtaining funding has affected founders of all walks of life. With the seed round having been redefined, becoming what used to be considered a Series A, access to capital has been reduced. However, with less access to family and friends funds, and very few active pre-seed investors, minority founders have been more adversely affected than most. In 2016, we see a number of investors building towards new visions, especially in the pre-seed sector. We know growing a venture firm or starting an angel syndicate is just like building a start-up. It's a challenge to raise money and build up a talent pipeline simultaneously, especially when it comes to minority founders. TC wants to ease this pipeline issue by putting you and your colleagues in the room with exceptional minority founders every quarter. While there is no fee to attend our events, we are expecting you to bring your own value to the table. Whether it's funding, advice, introductions to others in your network or some combination thereof, help us take minority founded companies to the next level. Together, we will make the American Dream 2.0 accessible to talented entrepreneurs from all walks of life.
